FRIDAY MORNING DEC 12 1862

The President's Message

The copy of the President's Message which is laid before the readers of the [illegible], is evidently full of errors. We have endeavored to give it the plainest reading possible by comparing the copy which came overland on Wednesday and that received by steamer on the evening of the same day. The first was the Message as transmitted by telegraph to Yreka and the other is it was sent by the Associated Press of California.

The first topic of special importance on which Mr Lincoln touches is the currency question. He proposes to give the United States notes in charge of the [illegible] banking institutions to be [illegible] by them. The banks are to give United States bonds in security for the amount of the notes entrusted to their charge. They are to redeem these notes, with gold, on presentation. The expense of preparing the notes is to be taken from the interest which bonds deposited by the banks may draw. It is questionable if the banks will take United States notes and circulate them unless they are made receivable for all dues to the Government, for they would be certain to be returned by the holders whenever gold was needed to pay imposts, or to settle demands from abroad. On this account, the banks could not keep them in circulation long enough to profit by the use of them. The scheme properly elaborated may be made to answer the end proposed.

The figures in the Message may or not be correct, and in consequence any use of them is superfluous. The telegraph is not reliable in this particular, and we postpone any notice of the financial statements of the Government until the printed copy from the Atlantic side is received.

The President thinks that there was a general confederation of all the Indians north of the Missouri and west of the Mississippi with the object of attacking the whites. He proposes to re-model our Indian system.

The proposition to widen and deepen the Illinois and Michigan and the Erie canals may be a military necessity. If so, the recommendation to that effect is eminently just and proper. For the same reason, the earnestness shown in regard to the Pacific railroad should be hailed, by all classes, with pleasure.

The most singular, the most original, and at the same time the most practical part of the Message, is that which relates to emancipation. Of the intention to declare all the slaves free, on the 1st of January, 1863, not a word is said in the Message, but the Emancipation Proclamation is submitted to Congress, with the other executive documents. He proposes three amendments to the Federal Constitution, containing his ideas in regard to the justice and economy of emancipation. He assumes that, if the discordant element of slavery is removed from amongst us, the progress of the nation will be accelerated. The South is no more responsible for the existence of slavery than the North. If the negroes are liberated, it should be at the common charge of the North and South. Negroes who have escaped by the chances of war should not be paid for, except those of loyalists. Arrangements should be made to colonize them. Each State may adopt its own system of emancipation if the completion of it shall be before the year 1900. It is easier to pay the interest on the value of the slaves set free until the emancipation of the black race is complete than it is to pay the money as emancipation advances. This, however, is merely a question of finances. It is cheaper to buy the negroes than it is to fight for their freedom, to say nothing of the saving of precious lives, and the injustice of taking them without compensation.

We notice, among our exchanges, a disposition to be witty about Honest Abe's style of composition. No allowance is made for the errors of the telegraph. One paper, directed by an alien of English birth, says that if a man reads the Message from beginning to end, he cannot express himself on any topic for two days afterwards without appearing to mean exactly the opposite of his intention. Flippancy of this character may be tolerated in San Francisco, where the first requisite of a Union editor is that he shall be a foreign spy and a secessionist; but in this quarter of the world it will require something more than a sneer to destroy the confidence of the people in Mr Lincoln's ability. This State is now represented in the United States Senate by men who sprung from the same rank in life in which Mr Lincoln was born. They like him have been laborers in the field and at the bench, and like him they owe all they have, and are, to their own exertions. It is nothing more nor less than contemptible to throw the educational deficiencies of a man in his face when his written productions contain that which is of value in itself.

A newspaper correspondent says that Olympia would be a respectable place, if it were not for the annual gathering of the Washington legislature at that place and the presence of the Federal officials.

The Committee [illegible] reported Messrs Smith [illegible] from Walla Walla [illegible] entitled [illegible] seats.

These gentlemen [illegible] were [illegible] at the same time was [illegible] officers of the House, [illegible] House adjourned.

Nothing has been [illegible] towards [illegible] in the Council [illegible]

Mr Simms of Walla Walla arrived here on Saturday evening. There [illegible] members of the Council present [illegible] quorum has as yet met. The absentees are Messrs More and Bledsoe [illegible] latter perhaps will be in to-night [illegible] It is said that as soon as Mr Bledsoe arrives the Council will proceed to organize. The three prominent candidates for the Presidency are Messrs Clark, Hulbs and [illegible], neither of whom seems to have much advantage over the others than [illegible] until the arrival of one or more of the absent members [illegible] likely to be settled.

We have had a little touch of [illegible] Oregon mist [illegible] here within the past five or six [illegible] but are again favored with beautiful sunshiny weather, the atmosphere mellow [illegible] as Spring. [illegible]

Late Eastern News

FORTRESS MONROE, Dec [illegible] — Late Raleigh (N C) papers indicate a strong feeling of disgust with the war and a desire growing more prevalent for peace. The village of Greenville on [illegible] river has been taken possession of by our forces.

NEW YORK, Dec 5 — In the U S Senate yesterday Mr Clark offered a joint resolution that the Senate and House cordially approve the policy of the President in setting free slaves in insurrectionary districts as indicated in his 22d of September proclamation and recommend to him the employment of that and every other means known to civilized warfare to terminate the present rebellion and assert the supremacy of the President of the United States over the entire territory and people. It was ordered printed.

FORTRESS MONROE, Dec [illegible] — We learn from those who have had opportunity of seeing for themselves that Petersburg and the points along the route between there and Richmond are being fortified, by digging rifle pits and throwing up strong earthworks. Large forces are at work upon them day and night.

FAIRFAX, Va, Dec [illegible] — An arrival from Richmond reports that part of Jackson's force was at Madison Court House last week.

WASHINGTON, Dec 5 — The Committee on Ways and Means will probably hold a meeting to-day to consider certain proposed amendments to the Tax law which are believed to be necessary for its successful operation.

CHICAGO, Dec 6th — The Texas Republican of November 1st gives an account of the execution of 42 men said to have belonged to a secret society in the Northern part of the State, the object of the Society being to surrender that portion of the State to the Federal authorities.

PHILADELPHIA, December 6th — Fortress Monroe advices of yesterday announce the sailing of a fleet of several transport and two iron clads with sealed orders. Destination unknown.

WASHINGTON, December 6th — It is stated on high authority that the President has no knowledge whatever of the statements contained in the New York Tribune of yesterday in regard to the proposals for peace from the Southern officials, neither has he received any communication from Fernando Wood on the same subject as stated by that gentleman in his speech in New York on Saturday last.

NEW YORK, Dec 6 — The rebel account of the capture of one of our gunboats in New river, telegraphed from Fortress Monroe three days since, was incorrect. The fact was the gunboat Ellis went on the expedition up that river to Onslow, capturing the town and three vessels, and when returning, our vessel grounded and was fired on by the enemy. To prevent her falling into their hands, the vessel was blown up, the commanding officer himself applying the match.

NEW YORK, Dec [illegible] — Private advices from Mexico state that the French army cannot leave its present position for want of transportation, and that orders have been sent here for the purchase in the United States of 1,000 mules and harness and [illegible] wagons. The army will not therefore move until this purchase is made.

Miscellaneous Items.

Many of the Eastern papers have advanced their rates of subscription and advertising.

Prince Napoleon has selected at Corsica a site for a bronze statue of Napoleon I, which is to be made from pieces of artillery taken at Jena.

Chevalier Hulseman, Austrian minister intends taking up his residence in New York, where for the past year he has resided most of the time.

The St Paul (Minn) Pioneer calls Gen Pope a football of evil destiny, the stick of an exploded sky rocket, and a number of other hard names.

The San Francisco Bulletin says that the quarrels among the Federal officials in Washington Territory are disgraceful. The powerful leaders of the P[illegible] and Standard are spoken of by that paper as [illegible].

Prince John Van Buren says that Greely shows his consistency as a temperance man, by publishing three columns of advertisements for whisky shops. When taken to task about it, "Horace said it was no time to talk about side issues."

The pistols of Daniel O'Connell were recently sold at auction in London. With one of these, in 1845, O'Connell shot D'Esterre. An inscription inside the pistol case stated that D'Esterre was promised £1,000 down and £1,000 for life, by the Dublin Orangemen, if he killed O'Connell. The pistols brought £[illegible].

WHITEWASHED — W. [illegible] Brown was appointed to examine into the Victor Smith case at Port Townsend. Mr Brown examined Mr Smith's books and says Smith is all right. It is very likely Smith's books are right whether Smith is or not. The Steilacoom Herald does not think Smith is right and rather delicately hints that Brown is not exactly right himself. There is another gentleman charged with the business of examining into this Victor Smith affair and if his report should state that Smith is not right we will have to have a third person to decide whether Smith is right or wrong.

ASSESSMENT — An abstract of the assessment of the Assessment District No [illegible] shows that there [illegible] to the [illegible] Licenses. There is also tax on Manufacturers, Brewers, Steamboats, Ferryboats, Slaughterers of cattle [illegible] amounting to $2,[illegible] each quarter, which must be reported in [illegible]. This makes an addition of $8,264 a year, or a total of $[illegible],[illegible]7 a year. The following table shows the different trades, businesses and professions for which licenses are taken out:

Apothecaries [illegible], Auctioneers 4, Brewers [illegible], Bankers [illegible], Billiard Rooms [illegible], [illegible] 2, Dentists [illegible], Eating Houses [illegible], Hotels 14, Lawyers [illegible], Livery Stables [illegible], Manufacturers 28, Photographers [illegible], Physicians [illegible], Wholesale Dealers in Liquors [illegible], Retail Dealers in Liquors [illegible], Wholesale Dealers in Goods and Merchandise [illegible], Retail Dealers in Goods and Merchandise [illegible], Wholesale Tobacconists 2, Retail [illegible].

The National Tax for Assessment District No 1 is estimated at $382 20 a year.

FRIDAY MORNING DEC 12 1862

The President's Message

The copy of the President's Message which is laid before the readers of the Oregonian is evidently full of errors. We have endeavored to give it the plainest reading possible by comparing the copy which came overland Wednesday, and that received by steamer in the evening of the same day. The first was the Message as transmitted by telegraph to Yreka, and the other as it was sent to the Associated Press of California.

The first topic of special importance on which Mr Lincoln touches is the currency question. He proposes to give the United States notes in charge of the corporate banking institutions to be circulated by them. The banks are to give United States bonds in security for the amount of the notes intrusted to their charge. They are to redeem these notes, with gold, on presentation. The expense of preparing the notes is to be taken from the interest which bonds deposited by the banks may draw. It is questionable if the banks will take United States notes and circulate them, unless they are made receivable for all dues to the Government, for they would be certain to be returned by the holders whenever gold was needed to pay imposts or to settle demands from abroad. On this account, the banks could not keep them in circulation long enough to profit by the use of them. The scheme, properly elaborated may be made to answer the end proposed.

The figures in the Message may or not be correct, and in consequence any use of them is superfluous. The telegraph is not reliable in this particular, and we postpone any notice of the financial statements of the Government until the printed copy from the Atlantic side is received.

The President thinks that there was a general confederation of all the Indians north of the Missouri and west of the Mississippi, with the object of attacking the whites. He proposes to re-model our Indian system.

The proposition to widen and deepen the Illinois and Michigan and the Erie canals may be a military necessity. If so, the recommendation to that effect is eminently just and proper. For the same reason, the earnestness shown in regard to the Pacific railroad should be hailed, by all classes, with pleasure.

The most singular, the most original, and at the same time the most practical part of the Message, is that which relates to emancipation. Of the intention to declare all the slaves free, on the 1st of January, 1863, not a word is said in the Message, but the Emancipation Proclamation is submitted to Congress, with the other executive documents. He proposes three amendments to the Federal Constitution, containing his ideas in regard to the justice and economy of emancipation. He assumes that, if the discordant element of slavery is removed from amongst us, the progress of the nation will be accelerated. The South is no more responsible for the existence of slavery than the North. If the negroes are liberated, it should be at the common charge of the North and South. Negroes who have escaped by the chances of war should not be paid for, except those of loyalists. Arrangements should be made to colonize them. Each State may adopt its own system of emancipation, if the completion of it shall be before the year 1900. It is easier to pay the interest on the value of the slaves set free until the emancipation of the black race is complete, than it is to pay the money as emancipation advances. This, however, is merely a question of finances. It is cheaper to buy the negroes than it is to fight for their freedom, to say nothing of the saving of precious lives, and the injustice of taking them without compensation.

We notice, among our exchanges, a disposition to be witty about Honest Abe's style of composition. No allowance is made for the errors of the telegraph. One paper, directed by an alien, of English birth, says that, if a man reads the Message from beginning to end, he cannot express himself on any topic for two days afterwards without appearing to mean exactly the opposite of his intention. Flippancy of this character may be tolerated in San Francisco where the first requisite of a Union editor is that he shall be a foreign spy and a secessionist. But in this quarter of the world it will require something more than a sneer to destroy the confidence of the people in Mr Lincoln's ability. This State is now represented in the United States Senate by men who spring from the same rank in life in which Mr Lincoln was born. They like him have been laborers in the field and at the bench, and like him they owe all they have, and are, to their own exertions. It is nothing more nor less than contemptible to throw the educational deficiencies of a man in his face, when his written productions contain that which is of value in itself.

A newspaper correspondent says that Olympia would be a respectable place, if it were not for the annual gathering of the Washington legislature at that place and the presence of the Federal officials.

[illegible] gentlemen came [illegible] bar and were sworn in by [illegible] at the same time [illegible] the House [illegible] the House adjourned.

Nothing has been [illegible] towards organization in the Council [illegible] report.

Mr Simms of Walla Walla arrived here on Saturday evening. There are now seven members of the Council present, though no quorum has as yet met. The absentees are Messrs More and Bledsoe, the latter perhaps will be in to-night or to-morrow. It is said that as soon as Mr Bledsoe arrives the Council will proceed to organize. The three prominent candidates for the Presidency are Messrs Clark, Hubbs and McFadden, neither of whom seems to have much advantage over the others than [illegible] until the arrival of one or more of the absent members the contest is not likely to be settled.

We have had a little touch of the Oregon mist over here within the past day or two but are again favored with beautiful sunshiny weather, the atmosphere mellow and balmy as spring.

Late Eastern News

Fortress Monroe, Dec [illegible].—[illegible] Raleigh (N C) paper indicate a strong feeling of disgust with the war and a desire growing more prevalent for peace. The village of Greenville in Fairfax, has been taken possession of by our forces.

New York, Dec [illegible].—In the U S Senate yesterday Mr Clark offered a joint resolution that the Senate and House cordially approve the policy of the President in setting free slaves in insurrectionary districts, as indicated in his 22d of September proclamation and recommend to him the employment of that and every other means known to civilized warfare to terminate the present rebellion and assert the supremacy of the President of the United States over the entire territory and people. It was ordered printed.

Fortress Monroe, Dec 5.—We learn from those who have had opportunity of seeing for themselves, that Petersburg and the points along the route between there and Richmond are being fortified by digging rifle pits and throwing up strong earthworks. Large forces are at work upon them day and night.

Fairfax, Va, Dec [illegible].—An arrival from Richmond reports that part of Jackson's force was at Madison Courthouse last week.

Washington, Dec 5.—The Committee on Ways and Means will probably hold a meeting to-day to consider certain proposed amendments to the Tax law which are believed to be necessary for its successful operation.

Chicago, Dec 6th.—The Texas Republican of November 1st gives an account of the execution of 42 men said to have belonged to a secret society in the Northern part of the State, the object of the Society being to surrender that portion of the State to the Federal authorities.

Philadelphia, December 6th.—Fortress Monroe advices of yesterday announce the sailing of a fleet of several transport and two iron clads, with sealed orders. Destination unknown.

Washington, December 6th.—It is stated on high authority that the President has no knowledge whatever of the statements contained in the New York Tribune of yesterday in regard to the proposals for peace from the Southern officials, neither has he received any communication from Fernando Wood on the same subject as stated by that gentleman in his speech at New York on Saturday last.

New York, Dec 6.—The rebel account of the capture of one of our gunboats in New river, telegraphed from Fortress Monroe three days since, was incorrect. The fact was the gunboat Ellis went on the expedition up that river to Onslow, capturing the town and three vessels, and when returning, our vessel grounded and was fired on by the enemy. To prevent her falling into their hands, the vessel was blown up, the commanding officer himself applying the match.

New York, Dec 6.—Private advices from Mexico state that the French army cannot leave its present position for want of transportation, and that orders have been sent here for the purchase in the United States of 1,000 mules and harness and 500 wagons. The army will not, therefore, move until this purchase is made.

Miscellaneous Items

Many of the Eastern papers have advanced their rates of subscription and advertising.

Prince Napoleon has selected at Corsica a site for a bronze statue of Napoleon I, which is to be made from pieces of artillery taken at Jena.

Chevalier Hulseman, Austrian minister intends taking up his residence in New York where for the past year he has resided most of the time.

The St Paul (Minn) Pioneer calls Gen Pope a football of evil destiny, the stick of an exploded sky rocket and a number of other hard names.

The San Francisco Bulletin says that the quarrels among the Federal officials in Washington Territory are disgraceful. The powerful leaders of the Press and Standard are spoken of by that paper as low slang.

Prince John Van Buren says that Greeley shows his consistency as a temperance man, by publishing three columns of advertisements for whisky shops. When taken to task about it, Horace said it was no time to talk about side issues.

The pistols of Daniel O'Connell were recently sold at auction in London. With one of these in 1845 O'Connell shot D'Esterre. An inscription inside the pistol case stated that D'Esterre was promised £1 000 down and £1 000 for life by the Dublin Orangemen, if he killed O'Connell. The pistols brought £1 [illegible].

Whitewashed.—A Mr Brown was appointed to examine into the Victor Smith case, at Port Townsend. Mr Brown examined Mr Smith's books and says Smith is all right. It is very likely Smith's books are right whether Smith is or not. The Steilacoom Herald does not think Smith is right and rather delicately hints that Brown is not exactly right himself. There is another gentleman charged with the business of examining into this Victor Smith affair, and, it is reported should state that Smith is not right, we will have to have a third person to decide whether Smith is right or wrong.

Assessments.—An abstract of the assessment of the Assessment District No 1 shows that there is a [illegible] of [illegible] dwelling houses. [illegible] Manufacturers, Brewers, Steamboats, Ferryboats, Slaughtered animals, &c amounting to $2 [illegible] for each quarter which must be reported in [illegible]. This makes an addition of $8 [illegible] a year or a total of $17,277 a year. The following table shows the different trades, businesses and professions for which licenses are taken out:

Apothecaries, [illegible]; Auctioneers, 4; Brewers, [illegible]; Bankers, 2; Billiard Rooms, [illegible]; [illegible], [illegible]; Dentists, [illegible]; Eating Houses, 12; Hotels, 14; Lawyers, 22; Livery Stables, [illegible]; Manufacturers, 25; Photographers, [illegible]; Physicians, 11; Wholesale Dealers in Liquors, 8; Retail Dealers in Liquors, [illegible]; Wholesale Dealers in Goods and Merchandise, [illegible]; Retail Dealers in Goods and Merchandise, [illegible]; Wholesale Tobacconists, 2; Retail [illegible], [illegible].

The National Tax for Assessment District No 1 is estimated at $582[illegible] a year.

DIPTHERIA.—The terrible malady known as diptheria, is prevailing to an alarming degree in this place It attacks children of from three to ten years more frequently than persons of any other age Unless taken in its incipiency it is almost sure to prove fatal to the class mentioned The danger of a fatal result to grown people is comparatively small. We recommend parents to call in medical advice at the first symptoms of the disease, as it yields readily to treatment in the first ten hours.

SWEET POTATOES.—Mr George Gansz presented us, yesterday, with a few messes of sweet potatoes of fine quality and large size which, when properly baked, were excellent Mr. Gansz informs us that he has plenty more of the same sort at his provision store, corner of Pine and First streets, also, fresh eggs, butter, etc., etc.

PERSONAL NOTICES.—The San Francisco Evening Bulletin has a correspondent in Portland. This gentleman is entitled to be ranked as a humorist of more than respectable pretensions. His notices of the letters from a prominent official to "My old friend Bog'ey," and "Mr. Lard, Dear Sir," are excessively funny. He has also, on many occasions given short personal sketches of leading public men in this State No doubt they were all sufficiently truthful, and, to the reader, very entertaining. But the subjects of these notices do not think them so funny In fact, they think it is disagreeable, in some cases, to be snapped up, without being asked about it, and held up for the edification of newspaper readers in San Francisco or here No matter how good the general reputation of a man may be, he does not find much amusement in seeing himself as others see him, in the columns of a widely-circulated journal We put the question to the gentleman referred to as the correspondent, How would you like your biography to be published for the People to talk about? A word to the wise is as good as a wink or a nod to a blind horse, as Dundreary might have said.

Marrying a Farmer.

"And so to-morrow you leave us? Oh Amy, little did I think when I saw you wedded to Henry Kingsley, Representative from [illegible] District New York, that he would ever take you to such a home."

"And why not, my sister? I knew that he was a farmer, and when I promised to be his bride, I expected to be a farmer's wife. Nor would I change my lot, if I could. I expect to be very happy there. All I shall miss will be the loved ones at home; and I could not expect to carry them with me to my new home."

"But just think of it, sister! You who have been reared so tenderly to work like Aunt Rachel, perhaps. I expect, if ever I come to see you, to find you out milking the cows, or feeding the pigs, or at least, in the kitchen, cooking for great, hungry men who do not know jelly from custard. It is too bad." Here Nelly broke down and sobbed outright.

Amy tried to soothe her by telling her of her noble and kind husband, and that he would not suffer her to be unhappy anywhere. But she would not be comforted, and when she met her brother in law at tea, her eyes were red with weeping. She took, too, but little pains to conceal the fact that she thought him a tyrant of the worst kind. He ascribed her strange mood to grief at parting with her only sister, and with true delicacy, made no reference to it. The next day Amy Kingsley went out from her old home to her new one, and from old and tried friends to new and untried ones.

Nelly fretted herself really ill over the fancied unhappiness of her sister. And when letters came, bright, glowing letters filled brimming full of happiness, she was still unconvinced.

"Oh, yes," said she to her mother, "I know how it is. She is too noble to complain, and she knew I was so troubled about her."

"But," says the mother, "she sends an invitation, endorsed by her husband, to have you come and see for yourself."

"Oh, I should die in a very little while, I know I should! But for poor dear Amy's sake, I will go and stay as long as I can, if you and papa think best."

They did think it best. For the sisters had never been separated before, and poor Nelly was pining sadly. The morning on which she was to go, her mother came in and proposed assisting her in packing her trunk.

"A trunk, mamma! A travelling bag will be all I shall need to take. I can put one dress in that. A home dress is all that I shall want."

But Mrs Conway insisted. A trunk was nicely packed, and, in due time, accompanied by its fair owner to the residence of Hon. Henry Kingsley.

When the first warm greeting was over Nelly looked around in mute surprise at the luxurious surroundings of her sister's. Carpets, curtains, mirrors, paintings—and all superior to those in her father's house. And then the library! Tiers of the choicest books, reaching from ceiling to floor, were relieved by portraits, maps and statues in every niche and corner. "But there must be a skeleton somewhere!" thought obstinate little Nelly, as she followed her to her room; her own room, as Nelly insisted on calling it. How sweet and pure it was, with its white and blue hangings, and blue and buff carpet, with furniture to match! And then those vases of violets and mignonettes! Amy knew she would miss them, and had placed them there herself.

"It is nice, after all, Amy! and I have been silly to worry about you. But," and she looked up and down the long, dusty road, edged with green and shaded with trees, "you must be lonesome. There is no house near you, and but a few in sight." And the troubled look came back to the young face.

"No, Nelly, I am not lonesome. I have all the company I wish for, especially now you have come. But come, let me assist you in laying aside this traveling dress, and show you into the bath room, and then you must rest, while I go and prepare supper for those 'great and hungry men.'"

"Oh! then you do have to cook for the men, just as I expected!" And the tears came into the poor, tired eyes once more.

"Yes and I eat at the same table with them, too, and I like it."

"There! Did I not tell you so? This comes of marrying a farmer! Poor Aunt Rachel! When I used to pity her so, I did not think my sister would have to drudge in the same manner."

"I do not need a bit of sympathy, I am just as happy as I can be. But come rest a little while, and then dress. I want you to look your best. Did you bring that blue silk I like so well? Oh, yes! [illegible]. Shall I send Fanny up to help you?"

"No, Amy, if she is your girl, and you must take her place in the kitchen."

"Now, don't fret any more, please! and in half an hour I shall send Fanny."

And Fanny came, and her nimble fingers soon convinced Nelly that it was no new employment to her. When Nelly entered the parlor, she found her brother in law waiting to receive and welcome her, and then turning, he introduced a brother to her who was standing by his side. He was a fine-looking man, of twenty five perhaps, and just the one to make an impression on a loving heart like Nelly's.

The tea-bell soon rang, and Nelly, taking Mr Kingsley's arm, went out, dreading the staring eyes of the workmen. But the little tea-table was laid for only four, and fairly glistened with its snowy napkins, lucid china, and shining silver. Fanny, in a white apron, and with almost as white hands, attended the table, and Nelly gave a little sigh of relief, as her last bugaboo vanished, and chatted, like herself, with her friends.

"How do you like us in our new home, Nelly?" said the husband, glancing at Amy. "Do we answer your expectations as farmers?"

Nelly was sure he was quizzing her, and answered, with some show of spirit:

"I think it is a shame for a man of your talents, and taste, and wealth, to bury himself in such a solitary place as this. Why, I would not be compelled to pass my days here for the world!" The happy couple only laughed and Nelly began to think she was very silly, and laughed too, and wished that she had been a little less demonstrative.

After tea the husband proposed a walk in the garden, and here, as within the dwelling, the most artistic taste marked every arrangement. A perfect wilderness of flowers, and yet not a thing out of place. Nelly felt that she would never tire of its beauties; but Amy soon [illegible], as Nelly was quite weary. "And," said she, glancing at her husband, "I shall want her to go with me to milk the cows."

"I shall do no such thing! The horrid things with their great sharp horns and ugly feet! I was always afraid of them at Aunt Rachel's. Once [illegible] came at me once, and I would have [illegible] if I had not screamed [illegible] drive her away. Aunt said that it was the clover blossoms I had in my hand that she wanted, and not me; but I don't think so. At any rate, I have had a perfect antipathy to cows and clover blossoms ever since."

Henry laughed. "Well if you are so afraid of cows Amy need not go for them nor milk them to-night."

Nelly knew they were laughing at her again, and looking up she saw a pair of magnificent eyes brimming with mirth fixed upon her, and her own eyes and cheeks burned until they pained her. As soon as she reached the house she hurried away to her own room to give vent to her outraged feelings. But Amy suspected her, and quickly followed, to find her in tears.

"This is too bad. Poor tired Nelly—I did not dream that I was grieving you."

"Oh! I do not mind you Amy, nor your husband. But that great, overgrown brother, who don't even speak to me, but, if he dared, would laugh at me all the time—I don't like him one bit."

"Oh! don't say so Nelly. He is the kindest, best brother in the world. You must like him for our sake. And now I will tell you about our arrangements here. We have a large farm with none of its cares—or, at least, I have none. The land is all rented to four men with families. You can see their pretty cottages from the door all built on the farm. Half of the property belongs to Arthur, who lives with us, as you see. We keep three servants, and they are excellent—attending to everything that servants should attend to."

"But where are those great hungry men you spoke of?"

"Did you not see them at table? Henry and Arthur! They are large, and usually hungry."

"And the cows—was that too a joke on poor me?"

"Yes, darling. I could not milk a cow any more than you could."

"Well I forgive you all, but that brother—I must punish him."

"Well, come now—we must go down—Have you any new music?"

"Some, if mamma has packed it. Do you know that I was only going to bring one dress? But here is the music."

(Conclusion to-morrow.)

Ditch Case

Andrew Donelson et al vs Daniel Littlefield et al

This case originated in a controversy between plffs and defts, as to which had the better right to the water of Elk Creek near Auburn in Baker county. A large amount of evidence was taken and the case was presented to Judge Shattuck at Chambers—Geo H Williams for plffs. W W Page for defts. We have been furnished with a copy of Judge Shattuck's opinion, but for want of room are compelled to omit his summary of the pleadings and evidence, and can only publish that part of his opinion involving the principles upon which the decision was made.

* * * * * * * *

Upon these facts the rights of these parties are to be adjudged.

It must be remarked at the beginning, that the claims of these parties are not dependent upon the ownership of the land through which the water flows, the fee being in the United States, and in all such claims to the use of water the test of priority must be possession, or actual appropriation.—Kelly vs Natoma Water Co, 6 Cal R 108.

Such appropriation must be actual and cannot be constructive because there would be no rule to limit or control it, resting as it must only in intention.—Abell and Eddy vs Simpson, 3 Cal R 249.

Applying this test to this case the plaintiffs clearly have the prior right, for their ditch was completed and the water of the creek was in their possession and used by them full half a month before the defendants had finished their ditch, or used the water for any useful purpose.

But it is contended by the defendants that the taking of the water into their ditch some time about the 20th of June for the purpose of "puddling" the ditch and determining the grade was an actual appropriation. Upon this point the evidence is not clear that the plaintiffs did not as soon as that take the water of the creek in their ditch for the purpose of experiment. It is clear that they did so sometime prior to the 23d day of June. But if it were certain that the defendants did use the water as stated to puddle the ditch before the plaintiffs had taken theirs, it is also certain that the defendants let the water run out of their ditch and flow back through natural channels into Elk creek again where the plaintiffs found it flowing in its usual manner when their ditch was completed. Such use by the defendants would not of itself entitle them to any priority of claim. For it is the settled law that the right of property in water is only usufructuary—is not in the corpus of the water and continues only with its possession. When the water had left the possession of the defendants by running out of their ditch, they lost all right to it, and could not reclaim it by virtue of the fact that it had been in their possession.—Eddy vs Simpson, 3 Cal R 249; 2 Black Com, 18; Angell on Water Courses 86.

But defendants further claim that by relation their right extends back to the survey made by Griffin in Nov 1861 and so is prior to that of the plaintiffs. [illegible] point the authorities bearing upon it in California where the subject has been often discussed are referred [illegible]. By an examination of these authorities however it will be seen that they proceed cautiously in the application of this doctrine of relation to this class of cases. They qualify it by holding that a work of this kind must be begun and prosecuted in good faith; that the intention to appropriate water must be clear and unequivocal and be followed up by due diligence; that it must be carried out in good faith and within a reasonable time.

As this doctrine of relation has not been much discussed in this State it deserves a little further examination in reference to this case.

Relation is defined to be a fiction of law [illegible] act or proceeding [illegible] (is carried back) [illegible] supposed to have taken place at a prior time [illegible]—Bouv Law Dict 399.

The rules [illegible]. Where there are divers acts [illegible] to make a [illegible] the original act shall be preferred and to this the other acts shall have relation.

Its familiar illustrations [illegible] are these and the like: thus letters of administration [illegible] effect by relation from the death of the intestate; a deed delivered as an escrow and afterwards delivered [illegible] will sometimes be allowed to take effect from the first delivery so as to give it effect from that time; a judgment at common law had effect by relation from the first day of the term of which it was entered.

This fiction is restricted to [illegible] the advancement of justice to sustain legal proceedings, but never when the result would be to deprive a party of a legal right or where it would work manifest injustice.—[illegible] 2 Ala R 164, cited in 2 Bouv Dic 409. [illegible] in its nature a [illegible] as true what is in fact false and its application [illegible] right to be allowed [illegible] only to prevent injustice.

Now how it may apply to cases of this sort. A series of acts are necessary actually to appropriate water by means of a ditch; these are the preliminary survey, the [illegible], the dams, the excavation, &c. These all require time to accomplish. Between the first step and the intention to appropriate and the actual enjoyment there must intervene time, labor and expense. It would be manifestly unjust in case one had begun such a work in good faith and at great expense was diligently and continuously carrying it on to completion, to allow another beginning long after and having full knowledge of the design and expenditure of the first, to deprive him of the enjoyment of his labor by some shorter or more speedily constructed work. It would be equally unjust where all have an equal right to appropriate and actual appropriation is the test of right, to allow one to prevent improvements of this kind throughout a large section of country and to deprive large settlements of the benefits of water for mining purposes for an indefinite length of time by merely setting a row of stakes or by breaking ground in one or two places on a pretended route for a ditch, while the party so claiming should be traveling about the country not to promote the alleged design of making a ditch, but to find better localities for mining.

To allow the claim of the defendants would be to dispense with diligence and to establish a rule like the latter above stated.

But the defendants insist that the inclemency of the weather and the snow rendered it impracticable for them to prosecute their work with any greater diligence than they did and that they did all that could be required of them.

The answer to this is that their ditch is in a more favorable locality for working in the spring than that of the plaintiffs, and while plaintiffs were pushing theirs rapidly on the defendants were either doing nothing upon theirs or were absent at Bear Creek hunting better mines.

But there is another aspect of this case of considerable importance, and that is the appearance of abandonment which the defendants by their statements and action held out.

It appears from the evidence that the plaintiffs entered upon their work and prosecuted it, under a belief that the defendants would not dig a ditch that season. The defendants made statements indicating at least a partial abandonment, and the plaintiffs acted upon them, and had made large expenditures before the defendants changed their avowals or course of action.

Much effect is claimed by the defendants for the work done on their ditch about the middle of May, but it seems to be entitled to very little consideration in a proper application of the doctrine of relation. It does not appear to have been done by the defendants or at their request, or at their expense. It was not an act done by the defendants in the regular and ordinary course of prosecuting the original design alleged, to construct a ditch. It was the voluntary act of persons at that time interested in mining claims in Griffin's Gulch. It cost the defendants nothing at the time and created no liability by which they would have been bound. It cannot be made a bridge to connect the actual possession of the water by the defendants in July, 1862, with the survey in November, 1861.

The defendants are not entitled to claim anything by relation prior to June 14th 1862 when their company was organized, and from which time they followed up their intention with 'due diligence.' Up to that date they had not used such diligence as to constitute an actual appropriation of the water. They had done very little, or almost nothing, and had been at little or no expense beyond a survey.

At that date the plaintiffs had advanced their work far up their line and it was going rapidly on, the expense of the plaintiffs at that date had also been heavy, and all apparently in good faith, and in part at least in consequence of the statements and representations which the defendants had themselves made.

The equities of the case are in favor of the plaintiffs.

As the capacity of the plaintiffs' ditch is shown to be at least two hundred and forty inches, and not to exceed four hundred inches and as the diversion of the water of Elk creek is a continuing injury and damage a perpetual injunction ought to be granted restraining the defendants and all persons acting under them or claiming under or through them from diverting the waters of Elk creek above the ditch of the plaintiffs in any manner so as to prevent the plaintiffs from receiving and using in their ditch at any season less than two hundred and forty inches of water through the whole length of their ditch.

Damages are not specifically prayed and none are awarded in this action, but the injunction is granted without prejudice to a claim for damages.

Decree for perpetual injunction for costs against defendants.
